Section 11 Any Other Comments cont:-

This morning 1st August 2006 I walked the extended length of this footpath and it can still be walked from Kellet Lane to Bradkirk Lane, part way along there is a foot crossing over the railway track.

All the old maps show it as bridle way and as such has been in existence for hundreds of years.

I was also told this morning by a worker for the gas board that a farmer or someone is trying to close the Bradkirk Lane section of the bridle path and I believe a great number of the residents at that end have put in objections.

The reason why I object to the claiming of this bridle path is that too much of this is taking place and these aforesaid bridle paths have a lot of local history attached, as many of the older residents will tell you. The one in question was used by many of the mill workers and also people who worked on the canal where the Walton Summit canal basin existed.

On closing I feel very strongly that the closure of such a bridle path would mean another less amenity to the local community, and also it comes at a time when we are being urged to 'get on our bikes' or walk to improve the environment, but if all these footpaths disappear all we can do is to use our cars.

Yours sincerely
